Origin of the Name Malakoff?

The House of Malakoff stands on historic ground, just above the collegiate church of Saint Cyriakus. Once, on this hilltop, a Benedictine monastery was built, founded in the year 861 by the nobleman Rudolf and his son Erich, and endowed with considerable landholdings.

That same year, in 861, the founding charter of the present-day town of Wiesensteig was signed here. The beautiful monastery, however, was destroyed during the medieval wars.

In 1855, a guesthouse was built on the hill, and its owner named it Malakoff, after a fort in the fortress of Sevastopol, which had just been captured by the French during the Crimean War.

Who could have imagined back in 1855 that just a few decades later, no one would remember exactly how the name "Malakoff" found its way into Swabia – and specifically to Wiesensteig?

At the time, enthusiasm ran high. During the Crimean War, a forward stronghold of the Sevastopol fortress – the Malakoff Tower – heroically withstood attacks from a coalition of English, French, Turkish, and Sardinian forces, led by French Marshal Amable Jean Jacques Pélissier.

On September 8, 1855, the bastion was stormed, decisively ending the war. Marshal Pélissier's fame soared – and just one year later, Emperor Napoleon III granted him the noble title Duke of Malakoff, appointing him Governor General of Algeria – a position of real influence at the time.

Even the usually hard-to-impress Swabians were swept up in the excitement. Before long, every little town wanted its own "Malakoff Mountain."

But that alone might not have been enough: the then-owner of the Reußenstein estate, General Fleischmann, who had spent several years as a diplomat...

...had spent several years in Paris, and thanks to family connections through his wife to the victor of Sevastopol, he likely played no small part in ensuring that the steep hill towering above the town – where the new guesthouse had just been built – would bear the celebrated name "Malakoff."

Local legend even claims that Marshal Pélissier himself visited Wiesensteig, and that he may have recruited young men there for the Crimean War.

But that's not all: some say that a few men from Wiesensteig even helped storm the Malakoff bastion themselves.

Burger-Fakten: Seinen Ursprung verdankt der Hamburger nicht dem Schinken, sondern der Stadt Hamburg. Bereits im 19. Jahrhundert war dort das sogenannte „Hamburger Steak“ bekannt – fein gehacktes Rindfleisch, kräftig gewürzt und schonend gebraten. Über die Auswanderer, die von Hamburg aus nach Amerika aufbrachen, fand diese Zubereitungsart ihren Weg in die Neue Welt. Dort wurde das Fleisch erstmals zwischen zwei Brothälften serviert – praktisch, sättigend und schnell genossen. So entstand ein Klassiker, der bis heute für ehrlichen Geschmack, gutes Fleisch und handwerkliche Küche steht.

Where is our Game coming from and what makes it special?

Wild Game from the Forests of Wiesensteig
Our wild game dishes come exclusively from the hunting grounds surrounding Wiesensteig – sustainably and responsibly harvested by local hunters of the Wiesensteig Hunting & Nature Conservation Center / Pohl.
The animals lived freely in the wild – observed and protected, and only taken when it was ecologically appropriate. As certified wildlife conservationists and "Alb Rangers" of the hunting school, every harvest is carried out with the utmost care and in harmony with the natural balance of our cultural landscape – and with deep respect for life. Here, hunting is not just tradition – it is active ecological stewardship. For healthy game populations, vibrant forests, and honest, local enjoyment on the plate.

History of the "Kloserbräu"

"Liquids don't break the fast"

In the monasteries, monks initially brewed beer only for their own needs. But soon, the quality of their brew surpassed what was available beyond the cloister walls.

Thanks to their education, abbots could read ancient texts and test historical recipes. This made them true masters of the brewing craft.

A common monastic saying was: "Liquida non frangunt ieiunum – Liquids don't break the fast."

This allowed the monks to brew and drink beer even during Lent. Since solid food was barely allowed, a strong, spicy, and nourishing beer helped them through the fasting season.

The alcohol content was lower than today – otherwise, the quantities would be hard to imagine: up to five liters per monk per day were common.

The seven swabians

Once upon a time, there were seven men from different corners of Swabia. They had banded together with a noble mission: to defeat the terrifying beast of Lake Constance – brave, bold, and determined. In Augsburg, they planned to arm themselves. But instead of each carrying a sword, they had a single, massive spear forged – seven men long. Their motto? "One for all – all on one!" So off they marched – in line, shoulder to shoulder, dragging the spear through forests and meadows, over sticks and stones. Naturally, it wasn't a leisurely stroll: adventures awaited them. A bear blocked their path. Fortunately, it was already dead – so stripping off its pelt was easy. Finally, they reached Lake Constance. And there, in the thick woods, it stood: the terrifying beast... a rabbit. It rose onto its hind legs, glanced at the trembling heroes... and bolted. Fear gave way to relief – the lake monster had been defeated! As a trophy of their great triumph, they took the bear's pelt home. In Überlingen, they were celebrated as dragon slayers. To honor their deed, a chapel was built where both the spear and the pelt were displayed. Though the chapel later fell victim to Swedish forces, the tale of the seven merry Swabians lives on.

The Pohl Family

Do you know the wildlife?

The Red Fox

The red fox is the most widespread wild predator in Germany. It is highly adaptable and lives in forests, fields, cities, and even villages. Its fur is usually reddish-brown with a lighter chest and a white-tipped tail. Red foxes are omnivores and eat mice, rabbits, birds, insects, fruit, and waste.

Roe Deer

The male has small antlers, while the female does not. Roe deer are much smaller than red deer. They are often seen in fields and at the edges of forests.

The European Hare

The European hare is a typical inhabitant of open landscapes in Germany. It can be recognized by its long hind legs, large ears ("spoon ears"), and brown fur. Hares are fast runners (up to 70 km/h) and are active at night. They feed on herbs, grasses, and field crops.

Wild Boar

Wild boars are called "Schwarzwild" ("black game") because of their dark bristles. The males are called boars, the females sows, and the young ones are called piglets. They are very intelligent and adaptable. Wild boars eat almost anything — from acorns to potatoes.

The Badger

The badger is easily recognized by the black stripes on its face. It lives in extensive underground burrows, which are used by many generations. Usually, it comes out at night to feed on earthworms, fruits, and small animals.

Restauration

In November 2014, Andreas Pohl – headmaster and owner of the Wiesensteig Hunting School – took over the once-renowned Hotel Malakoff. Together with architect Stolz from Neidlingen, his father Siegfried Pohl – then 83 years old, a master craftsman with an unshakable eye for the essential – and the entire family, a monumental effort began that would last three years.

Stone by stone, beam by beam, the building was restored with great attention to detail.

It wasn't simply renovated – it was reimagined.

From the old Hotel Malakoff emerged the Albhotel Malakoff – a place that today not only welcomes guests, but also serves as a "House of Nature", offering space for education, encounters, and awareness.

On May 1st, 2016, the doors opened for the very first time – not just to a new panoramic restaurant, but to a heartfelt project that preserves tradition while embracing the new.

A house not born from a catalogue, but from heritage you can feel – from its very foundations to the final window handle.

Founding of Wiesensteig

Wiesensteig was first mentioned in a document in the year 861, when a Benedictine monastery was founded on Mount Malakoff – the very site where Alhhotel Malakoff stands today. In 1103, the monastery became a collegiate church, which remained in place until the secularization in 1803. However, traces of settlement in the area go back as far as the Stone Age. The earliest known lords of the region were the Lords of Wiesensteig, who eventually came under the influence of the Counts of Wiesensteig. In 1555, Wiesensteig became the seat of this noble house, after Count Ulrich XVII had built a four-winged castle between 1551 and 1555.

In 1626, the male line of the Counts of Helfenstein died out. By 1642, two-thirds of the Imperial County of Wiesensteig had been sold to Electoral Bavaria, while the remaining third was transferred to the House of Fürstenberg through marriage. In 1752, the Fürstenberg share was also sold to Bavaria.

During the final year of the Thirty Years' War (1648), Swedish soldiers burned down nearly the entire town.

Around 1800, Wiesensteig experienced a period of economic prosperity, particularly in trade and craftsmanship. It became part of Württemberg and was elevated to district capital.

As a transport hub with stagecoach connections in all directions and, later, with the construction of the Tälesbahn railway in 1903, Wiesensteig became a center of employment.

Potatocity Wiesensteig

The potato – now a staple in every German household – had a surprisingly delicate beginning: It was not introduced as food, but as an ornamental plant. In 1589, the Counts of Helfenstein planted Germany's first documented potato in the castle gardens of Wiesensteig – not to feed anyone, but to admire its exotic violet blossoms.

Originally from South America, the potato was brought to Europe by the Spanish in the 16th century.

While it was already recognized as a food source in England and France, in Germany it remained a botanical curiosity for quite some time.
